Tandem aerotow training provides the most air time and makes learning to fly accessible to a wider variety of people. Have fun learning to fly with a certified instructor by your side. This package is ideal for students who do not want to learn to fly on the training hills as a result of preference, a previous sports injury, or physical conditioning.

Students learn to fly tandem at altitude with an instructor. Lookout uses ultralights specially designed to tow hang gliders for towed tandem training flights. The student and instructor are flying side by side in the tandem glider. The tandem training glider has big wheels permanently mounted for landing gear. This allows for gentle, rolling launches and landings on level ground. Your body does not touch the ground during any part of the flight.

The tandem hang glider is towed to 2000 feet behind the ultralight plane much like a water skier is towed behind a boat. Once the desired altitude is reached, the instructor releases from the tow vehicle and the student and the instructor are free flying side by side in the tandem glider. Students learn to fly the tandem glider, tow the tandem glider behind the ultralight, launch the tandem glider, set up an approach, and land the tandem glider. Once a student can perform these five tasks consistently, without assistance from the instructor, the student is qualified to fly solo.

Solo tow pilots do rolling launches from a launch cart and big wheels are attached to the basket of the glider for rolling landings. Students may decide to go to the training hills to learn to land the glider on your feet either during or after your tandem training. Rolling in on your wheels is a perfectly acceptable way of landing a hang glider in a nicely groomed, grass field like the one at Lookout.
